

The Art of Artificial Creation

A Philosophical Guide towards Approaching Image Generating AI

Iris van der Horn

Summary

Since artificial intelligence has developed to be capable of generating unique images, I will explore this new technology and discuss how it should be approached. Specifically, I will explore the relation between AI image generators and human made art, with the goal of answering the question if image generating AI should be considered artists. I will discuss how image generating AI, artists, and art are defined and how they can, will, and already are influencing each other. In doing so, I will touch upon and combine ideas from continental and modern philosophy of technology, mind, anthropology, and aesthetic.
